members. The commission, by law, must consist of seven members, but the President is not compelled to have more than a quorum. There are now two vacancies, one caused by the transfer of Governor Magoon, and the other by the failure of the Senate, at its last session, to confirm Joseph B. Bishon, whom the President Joseph B. Bishop, whom the President nominated, to fill an existing vacancy. It is very likely that one of the new members will be Mr. Rogers, the general counsel.

"What does he want?" asked Sir Simon, "Tell him to wait, Gilroy. can't see him at once. Lucy, stop here;

The housekeeper left the room to detain Mr. Beryl, and Lucy obediently resumed her seat. She was a handsome, dark girl, with rather a high color, and a temper to narch. But she knew when she was well off and kept her temper in check for fear of Sir Simon turning her adrift. He would have done so without scruple had it ulted him. Lucy was therefore astute nd assumed a meekness she was far from possessing. Mrs. Gilroy saw hrough her, but Lucy—as the saying goes pulled the wool over the old man's eyes. Sir Simon took a turn up and down the bruptly stopping before her.

Lucy looked up with an innocent smile. "Dear Bernard!" she said. I can make a Red Window here." "Do you know where he is?" asked the taking no notice of the sweet smile and sweet speech.
